

How to Make every bite count!

A guide to nutritious family
meals for babies and toddlers.

Make every bite count with nutrient-rich foods

Your choice of foods and how you feed your baby and toddler have an important influence on their eating habits throughout life.

Family meals made from fresh, nutrient-rich foods make it easy to meet everyone's needs from one meal that all will enjoy.

Which nutrients are important for growth and development?

The first two years of a baby's life is a time of rapid growth and development. Providing nutrient-rich foods will help meet requirements of essential nutrients at this important time.

Iron and zinc

Iron and zinc are vital for healthy growth and brain development.

From around six months of age, your baby's iron and zinc stores can become depleted. At this stage, it is important to start introducing good sources of these nutrients such as iron-fortified rice cereal and red meat.

Omega-3

To support your baby's brain and visual development, a regular intake of omega-3 fatty acids are required. Fish is the best source of omega-3, with red meat making the second largest contribution to intake in the Australian diet.

Calcium

Calcium is important for strong bones and good teeth. Breast milk should be the main source of calcium in your baby's diet until at least one year of age. Commercial infant formula is a satisfactory substitute for infants who are not breastfed. Whole-milk products such as yoghurt and cheese can be introduced from six months of age. Full-cream cow's milk can be offered as a drink from 12 months of age.

Protein

Protein is required for growth and development and your baby requires more because they are growing so rapidly. Amino acids are the building blocks of protein. Some foods such as red meat contain all the amino acids which are essential for a healthy body.

Good sources of Iron

- Red meat is high in iron and zinc which is well absorbed by the body.
- Haem iron (found only in meat, fish and poultry) is absorbed four times better than non-haem iron. This means more iron is absorbed from meat, fish or poultry than from plant foods (see graph).
- Red meat consumed three to four times per week makes it easier to meet dietary requirements.

Iron In Food

Meat-free diets

- Carefully choose suitable food alternatives that are high in iron and zinc.
- Combining plant food sources of iron with foods high in vitamin C helps to increase iron absorption.

Your baby's journey from puree to family meals

The "Silky, Smooth" stage

Around 6-7 months of age, red meat is suitable for babies. As soon as your baby has learnt to happily accept pureed or very finely mashed solid foods, red meat can become an important addition to the diet.

- For a smooth texture, meat must be tender and moist. Puree with boiled water or casserole juices. See silky steak and smooth stew recipes (page 6).
- Blend meat with a variety of different vegetables such as zucchini, pumpkin and sweet potato.
- If your baby rejects a new food, offer it again until the food becomes familiar and accepted.

The "Lumpy, Mushy" stage

Around 7-9 months of age, it is important to encourage your baby to chew varying kinds of textures. This helps to develop muscles for chewing and speech.

- Progress the texture to include small, fork mashed soft lumps.
- Your baby is able to chew foods even without teeth.

The Finger Food stage

Around 9-12 months of age, your baby's hand control improves. Encourage them to feed themselves. You can also offer some soft finger foods earlier if they are able to grasp foods.

- Cut food into small pieces which can easily be managed or held onto for chewing.
- Do not serve hard foods such as raw carrot, celery, apple or nuts as these may cause your baby to choke. Large round foods such as grapes and sausage can also pose a choking risk; however these can be simply cut in half or quarters.
- Never leave your baby alone while they are eating or let them wander as they eat.

The Toddler stage

Around 12 months of age, your toddler will start exerting their independence. They can be picky about when and what foods they will eat. It is important you maintain control of the food on offer!

- Let your toddler choose what to eat from a limited choice of only nutritious foods.
- Avoid encouraging or rewarding them with less nutritious treats for finishing the plate.
- If your toddler does not eat as much as you think they should, do not offer favourite alternatives – even if they are nutritious eg cow's milk.
- Make water the only drink of choice at meal time as filling up on milk and juices can reduce appetite and displace good food sources of iron and zinc.

How much food does my baby need?

- Children have a natural ability to adjust the amount they eat according to their needs and growth patterns. Every child is different; some days they will eat more than other days.
- Continue to consistently offer small portions of nutritious foods and trust your child to decide how much to eat at each meal and over the day.

Cooking red meat for babies

When you first introduce red meat to your baby, use the following simple cooking methods to cook red meat. You might find it more practical to cook a batch of meat and freeze small portions.

Recipes for smooth texture

Silky steak for babies

100g rump steak*, trimmed of fat

1 tsp olive oil

100g cooked pumpkin

1. Heat barbecue or non-stick frying pan. Rub meat with oil. Cook over medium-high heat for 3-4 mins on each side or until cooked. The meat should feel springy. Rest meat for 5 mins.
2. Slice meat and combine with cooked pumpkin and blend in a food processor or using stick blender until smooth.

Suggested vegetables to combine with meat puree: pumpkin, carrot, sweet potato or zucchini.

Smooth stew

200g diced lamb* or beef, trimmed of fat

1 tsp olive oil

1 carrot, peeled and chopped

1 stick celery, chopped

1 potato, peeled and chopped

1. Toss meat in oil. Heat small non-stick frying pan. Add meat and brown. Remove from pan and place in small saucepan.
2. Add carrot, celery and potato to saucepan and add 1 cup water (or enough to just cover contents). Bring to the boil, reduce heat and simmer for 1 ½ - 2 hours or until very tender.
3. Blend in food processor or using stick blender until smooth.

Storing red meat for babies

Fridge

- Cover, cool and refrigerate cooked meat immediately.
- Keep no more than 2 days in small, airtight containers.

Freezer

- Always add moisture to sliced, cooked meat when freezing eg boiled water, meat juices, mashed vegetables or casserole juices.
- Once food is cooked, freeze immediately in small portions in airtight containers. Use within 4 weeks.
- For small portions, freeze in ice cube trays and place in airtight freezer bags.
- Thaw cubes in refrigerator as required.
- Never refreeze meals that have been initially frozen then thawed.

Reheating

- Reheat thawed or refrigerated meat meals in a small amount of water in a small pan or microwave proof dish in the microwave.
- Make sure the meat and juices boil for a few minutes to ensure the food is thoroughly heated through (heat to at least 70°C).
- Mix well and check temperature of the food before giving to your baby.

Adapting the family meal

Once your baby is familiar with red meat, you can start preparing meals for your baby from the family meal.

The recipes in this brochure illustrate how to adapt the family meal for different developmental stages. Adjust the ingredients and flavours to reflect your preferred cuisine and cultural background.

A baby's tastebuds are quite sensitive.

- Add more intense spices and herbs such as chilli to your meal once baby's portion has been served.
- Avoid using salt on your baby's food so they will learn to enjoy the natural flavours of the food.
